What do you think about the ending of that prison interview? Was Aggie admitting she's also a psychopath? Her whole demeanor changes when she asks Niles to tell her what it feels like. Can't decide if I'm just over thinking or if there was any meaning behind it.

Title basically. I have a brand new Google TV with fiber 1 gig internet. Every app (even Pluto) works fine. The Netflix app has vertical tearing and anytime the camera or people move the picture is blurry. I have already gone into the account in the able browser and maxed out the playback quality, I cleared the cache, closed the application, and opened it again. I went into the tv settings and tried every single quality and motion setting. Nothing improves it.

This documentary that has it all: money, murder and autism! Did he do it? He's definitely Autistic as all get out, but that doesn't make him psycho- but it doesn't make him not psycho either. If he needed to be on meds and he wasn't on them, especially with so much childhood trauma, I could see him cracking. And from what I understand, physical oceanography and the study of currents is not "junk science" and has led to many rescues and sunken boats for a long time now. I feel his
